

When searching for a career, it is important to keep salary in mind. Money is not everything, but it can be a big factor in determining the quality of life that is lived. A salary for a radiologist is high even upon entry level. According to Dr Kelly S. Meier, the reported median for "...entry level radiologists was $206,920 in May of 2016" (1). As more experience is gained, the annual salary can increase. "Experienced radiologists may make as much as $470,000" (Meier 3). There are also other factors that can affect a radiologists salary and an example is geography. "New York, California, Texas, and Alabama pay top salaries for radiologists" (Meier 3). Money can influence decision making when choosing a career, and it is crucial to pay attention to the annual salary during a job search. Salary is an important factor in choosing a career, but there are other factors that should be considered as well.

TS (Topic Sentence)

A (Analysis – your words)

SS (Secondary Source – DQ or Paraphrase)

A (Analysis – your words)

SS (Secondary Source – DQ or Paraphrase)

A (Analysis – your words)

T (Transition)